

re: using animal tests for pharmaceuticals instead of invitro tests.

Mr. Friedman,

Please consider and think over everything I have written in this letter. I will, of course, ~~try my best~~ spell out all of my feelings about what a (B.S.) idea all of this is to you. However; what you are doing to these animals is harsh, cruel, violent, and completely ridiculous. Animals should not be in any way used for an unnecessary product experiment.

You are torturing these poor animals. Look at how much pain they are in. You think they like all of this cruelty? Why don't you go and actually watch the laboratory workers perform these insane experiments.

For God's sake, bring your daughter to bring your daughters to work day. Or even your son. Show them just what exactly you do. Show them what your company does to these living, breathing animals. And yes; go ahead and tell them that those tortured little rabbits, ferrets, monkeys, guinea pigs, and hamsters, won't be living and breathing for long.

If you are proud of your work, you could even tell them how these animals must be feeling: Terrified, scared out of their minds, incredibly uncomfortable, suffering, and dying. And even they ~~know~~ probably know that they will die. They are being forced against their will. Chemicals will burn their eyes and skin... tubes will be forced up their noses only for products to be pumped into their stomachs...

And when you leave to bring your kid home, after they have been shown the terror of your delicate workshop, I hope you look into their eyes, and see tears. And I hope you finally realize what a disgusting work of art you've decided to indulge in.

Sincerely,

C 314
